

The Department of Nutrition in the School of Public Health and Health Sciences at the University of Massachusetts Amherst offers a fully online Master of Public Health in Nutrition degree. We have had several WIC nutritionists enroll in, and successfully complete, this degree and we would like to invite you to consider this program as a way to advance your career.

The online MPH of Nutrition program allows health professionals to earn an MPH while continuing their careers. Through online learning, interaction with peers and instructors from all over the world, and access to UMASS library resources, the MPH in Nutrition degree allows you to gain knowledge and skills in nutrition and public health while maximizing flexibility in where and when you study.

The UMASS online MPH in Nutrition is accredited by the Council on Education for Public Health and is the first and only fully online, accredited MPH with a focus on Nutrition in the U.S.

- Flexible: No need to relocate. Learn at home or anywhere there's a computer with Internet access.
- Fully online: No residency requirement. No need to travel to campus.
- Part-time: Participate at any time of the day or night. Our program fits around your work schedule and other commitments.
- Interactive: Share ideas and collaborate with university faculty, public health professionals, and peers from all over the world.

The next application deadline is October 1, 2013 for Spring 2014 admission. For more information on admissions requirements, cost, and curriculum please read visit our webpages: <http://www.umass.edu/sphhs/online/mph-nutrition/prospective-students>

Please contact Lori Peterson if you have further questions: mphn@nutrition.umass.edu